Millie Werner, CSJ - June

I was born and raised in Detroit and my mother was an avid gardener. Our backyard was filled with vegetables, fruit trees and flowers. An early appreciation of nature developed.

As a child, I frequently requested a camera as a gift. Much to my delight, I received my first camera as a confirmation gift from my uncle. My interest in photography began and included nature scenes, clumps of flowers and family pictures as my subjects. My little box camera lasted for many years.

As a high school student I was given a new camera. I became more serious with my photographic adventures. In fact, I entered the

Characteristics of Balanced Caring: Burnout and the Cost of Not Caring

Dominic Vachon, M.Div., Ph.D.

$90, includes lunch.

In this workshop, Dr. Vachon will present a model of the psychological and spiritual characteristics of balanced caring. He will debunk over-sentimentalized notions of caring that we and others place on ourselves, and explore how these misconceptions can lead to ineffective caring. In their place he will provide a more accurate understanding of caring and offer more realistic and effective ways of understanding and living our roles as professional caregivers.

The psychology of balanced caring will be explored by looking at behaviors and attitudes that bring more fulfillment to the work of caring. We will hear case studies that illustrate some of the many dysfunctional helping dynamics that we witness. Dr. Vachon does this in an insightful and humorous way. Participants go away from the day feeling more aware of what they need to do to be balanced in their caring, but they also feel more energized and inspired with this new perspective.

Feel more energized and inspired

The workshop is designed especially for helping professionals of all types including medical professions, mental health, ministry, business management, leadership roles, law, public safety, and so on.

Hear case studies that illustrate dysfunctional helping dynamics & suggested alternatives

If what you do contributes to helping others, and if a sense of caring is important to you in this, then you will benefit from this workshop regardless of your work.

Open yourself to the gift of seeing God in your daily life and relationships.

Explore interior attitudes, practices and skills that foster contemplative living from the heart

During the 1950's and 60's, teachers such as the Trappist Monk Thomas Merton helped bring forth the inner riches of Christian spirituality. A generation later, Father Thomas Keating taught practices such as Centering Prayer as a way of practicing what Merton pointed to.

Now, a third generation of renewal in Christian contemplation brings insights to integrate contemplative practice with the pressured demands of modern life.

"Incarnational Centering Prayer" is the system developed by David Frenette to provide practical guidance on applying these teachings. It unearths these hidden treasures so that you can better recognize them as God brings them to life in your own practice.

local newspaper photography contest and won one of the weekly prizes.

After entering the Sisters of St. Joseph of Nazareth in August 1965, I began my studies at Nazareth College and majored in Biology.
My interest in photography was heightened as I went on field trips in the Kalamazoo area as part of the curriculum. I had a desire to capture the beauty of the many forms of nature I experienced and wanted to share that with others. In my free time during my years of ministry at Borgess Medical Center, I had many opportunities to visit the nature centers in the surrounding areas and continued my pursuit of photographic opportunities.

Now as a gardener and a photographer, my backyard invites me to take note of the beauty that abounds in nature and this has become a reflective, deepening spiritual experience for me. With patience and watchful waiting, I have come to a deeper awareness of God's love and presence and the gift that photography has been for me and others.
